

NCCDD website now available in Spanish

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The North Carolina Council on Developmental Disabilities has made its website available in Spanish, continuing its outreach to diverse communities across the State.

Visit www.nccdd.org and click on one of the two flags now found in the upper right hand corner of the navigation bar to view the website in Spanish or English.

"We are excited about this new resource for our disability community," said Chris Egan, NCCDD executive director. "Our community is diverse and we want continue to find ways to reach as many people across NC as possible by making our website as accessible as possible."

New upgrades include a streamlined Meeting, Agendas and Minutes section for the Council, Executive, Standing and Ad-Hoc committees. Minutes are now available online dating back to July 1, 2014, when Egan became executive director. The upgrade also allows search capabilities by keyword or dates as needed.

The Council improved the public notification capabilities of the site. "Upcoming Public Meetings" are now found on both the calendar in bright green boxes and the upcoming public meetings page found under "The Council." To get to the posted meeting information, users can click on the large green button at the top of the homepage; find future meetings in bright green boxes on the NCCDD Calendar; or click on any green box on the calendar and the meeting details will pop up.

All of these enhancements are part of the Council's efforts to reach out to North Carolina's diverse population to keep them better informed about the Council and its work.
